

Zephyr and the seed

Once upon a time there was a great inventor called Zephyr. He was an exciting person with green hair, a pointy hat and yellow goggles. He had orange trousers and an orange top with a rucksack on his back.

Zephyr lived in a small house full of all his extraordinary inventions. Every night he loved to put his yellow goggles and brown gloves on then set off to his work shop to tighten bolts or think of new inventions that he had not made yet. One night he set off to his workshop and thought that he might put on the news for him to listen to as he worked.

Just as he was about to turn off his television, the T.V news reporter quickly shouted breaking news:

“Climate change has got worse than ever before. Our planets animals and wildlife are all dying under the immense heat.” He knew that he had already created many wind turbines covering vast amounts of land but that clearly was not enough. That night he stayed up till the crack of dawn planning the features and looks of his new invention.

Zephyr was aware that this could be his biggest creation yet and he would need to work fast. Everyday and every night he would be up working on this incredible invention. People had started to get worried about Zephyr because he was usually outside on his sky board. Finally the day came when the clanking and banging stopped. Zephyr stepped out of his door and breathed in the cool breeze with only a single seed in his hand. Some of the people looked confused, they had all been expecting a big machine but they were all mistaken. Slowly, Zephyr went round explaining what it was. Some of the curious faces lit up but others kept their blank expression. Ten minutes later he was up in the air on his sky board to explore the places where the effects of climate change were occurring.

First, he set off to the cold melting ice caps in Antarctica. When he got there he was amazed at all of the melting ice crumbling away into the sea. Without wasting another second he took out his seed from his pocket. Then he balanced on his sky board and shot a frosty mist out of the seed onto the remaining ice which spread and restored the usual temperature and all of the ice.

Next stop was the exotic Great Barrier Reef. Half an hour later, he reached the amazing wonder. Once again he balanced on his sky board and shot a colourful spray out of the seed which spread in a familiar way. At once the water cooled and the amazing colour came back into the reef.

One hour later, he reached the vast Amazon rain forest. Unlike the other times he jumped off his sky board and landed with a thud. He slowly dug a small hole with his hand before putting the small seed in and covering it up. He took a step back as a huge tree rose up, then another, then another. Soon there were trees as far as you could see.

Zephyr quickly jumped on his sky board then set off for England. When he returned all of the people promised to change their ways and try and never let it happen again.

The End

By Samson

Age 8

Year 4 Southover school